

1st April 2008.

Dear Sir,

Several Labour Members of Parliament along with a third of the cabinet including Government Minister Tessa Jowell have displayed breathtaking hypocrisy over the Government's plan to close 2,500 post offices.

Hot foot from voting in the Commons to close the post offices these shameless people went to their constituencies and demonstrated to keep the post offices open.

More hypocrisy this time from Health Secretary, Alan Johnson who serves in the cabinet which approved the closure of the 2,500 post offices. Guess who said the following? "The British public wants to secure the future of an accountable and socially responsive Post Office. Communities are losing a focal point which for years has been a symbol of everything that is British". Step forward Alan Johnson. This was part of his speech when just 200 post offices were threatened in 1993.

Yours faithfully

Alan Wright
